Kellogg Urgently Recruiting Wrexham Factory Staff to Support Increased Demand for Cereal

Cereal giant Kellogg is urgently looking for additional fixed term team members at the Wrexham factory so the company can increase production and get more products such as Special K, Bran Flakes and Krave into UK shops as demand increases.

Anyone experienced in food manufacturing operations or with transferable technical skills are being asked to jump on the Kellogg Careers Website and apply.

Sam Bistiaux, the site leader at Kellogg's Wrexham factory, said: "At this time, our focus is on making all the food we can to help feed Britain. We have an amazingly dedicated team here at our Wrexham factory who are doing a fantastic job keeping things going. But as demand increases, so does our need for great people. That's why I'd ask anyone with the right skills and a great attitude to get in contact with us so we can talk to them about a fixed term role supporting operations."

Kellogg is ensuring that all surplus food is being donated to charities like Fareshare to be redistributed for those most in need through community centres such as foodbanks, elderly charities and soup kitchens. In the last week alone, Kellogg has sent three articulated lorry loads of foods to feeding charities.

The company is also supporting breakfast clubs which are open in the schools committed to caring for the children of key workers, including those in the NHS.
